Perhaps not endless but enough to win against the US-Ukrainian tandem!))

"These storage bases are not endless despite Russia keeping thousands of tanks and howitzers after 1991. Moreover, Russia cannot replenish these arms and material. If Ukraine can maintain a high level of combat intensity and the mounting level of Russian losses continues in 2024, it will be much harder for the Russian army to maintain its military power for offensive operations in 2025. That means the conventional Russian military threat to states other than Ukraine will become much more limited.

Before this expected exhaustion, Russia's military behavior may become even more erratic and volatile in the Ukrainian theater than in other areas, such as outer space."

Ukraine has never been independent ever,it's either a Russian or a US "ally".
 It doesn't have an elite able to support an independent statehood

"NATO didn't make Putin invade Ukraine. It is Putin's inability to tolerate an independent Ukraine that has driven his brutal invasion" - an excellent op-ed by Jon Richardson via @BBCNews I'm just wondering why the U.S. is worrying about the Russian special operation being delayed by a couple of days.Their "special operation in Afghanistan off-schedule by two decades.)
