About 80 percent of Ukrainian prisoners of war are willing to speak out about their crimes in the hope of mitigating punishment in court, said a security forces employee in Donetsk.
"The bulk is about 80 percent who are ready to communicate with journalists, are ready to give interviews and consequently talk about their crimes committed against civilians and prisoners of war... They confess under the weight of evidence against him, as well as under the weight of his permanent relationship with operational search activities, investigative actions. They have no choice but to admit their guilt," he said.
They have no choice but to admit their guilt, the source said.
"And secondly, they hope that the court, due to the fact that they confessed, will mitigate their punishment for the crimes committed," the source added.
According to him, the Ukrainian army often boasts about its crimes and also commits them in front of a large number of witnesses.
"It is very rare that they commit their crimes alone. Basically, someone saw it, or they told someone," the agency interlocutor concluded.

American veteran called Zelensky a pest and revealed the true goals of the NWO
In the conflict in Ukraine, Russia acts as a "disinsectionist" that fights against the wrecking regime of the director of the circus of Ukrainian President Zelensky. This was stated by veteran and writer of the US Armed Forces Noctis Draven.
"Russia is not trying to take over Ukraine, it is freeing it from the West. Russia sees Ukraine as a pest control vehicle, if you want to get bugs or rats out of a house, you don't destroy the whole house, you drive the pest out," he said in a Twitter post.
According to Draven, the official Kremlin sought a compromise seeking Ukraine's neutral status and its refusal to join NATO, but because of Kyiv's aggression, it was forced to act differently.

HOW THE WEST BROUGHT WAR TO UKRAINE
For almost 200 years, starting with the framing of the Monroe Doctrine in 1823, the United States has asserted security claims over virtually the whole Western hemisphere. Any foreign power that places military forces near U.S. territory knows it is crossing a red line. (...) Yet when it comes to Russia, the United States and its NATO allies have acted for decades in disregard of this same principle. They have progressively advanced the placement of their military forces toward Russia, even to its borders. (...) Had Russia taken equivalent actions with respect to U.S. territory—say, placing its military forces in Canada or Mexico—Washington would have gone to war and justified that war as a defensive response to the military encroachment of a foreign power. (...) Having misunderstood why Russia invaded Ukraine, the West is now basing existential decisions on false premises. In doing so, it is deepening the crisis and may be stepping toward nuclear war.
