I just reported the post below for hate and abusive language and LinkedIn representative reviewed by saying it is in line with their Professional Standards?! Are your standards so low?

It is Russia's War, not Putin's war
Recently, we hear and read a lot about "Putin's war". Let's put some things straight here: After WWII nobody accepted that it was "Hitler's war". And this was because there have been many Germans supporting him, too many. Some disagreed openly, many just accepted and said they could not change anything. Isn't it the same situation today in Russia? The Russian people is responsible for its government. So it is simply wrong to speak about Putin's war. It is Russia's war. This is sad, but it is the truth.
And I would really love to see the German government to see this point and act and help Ukraine much more than it does today. Stop Russian gas and oil supply!

Media: most Russians support war against Ukraine and want Putin to continue ruling

I have a new role model. We spend a lot of time talking about Leadership, debating the theories and the books to read. But this is real leadership - standing up for what you believe in. see more

This man holds the key to end this war. It's a battle of supremacy and sure as hell he is enjoying this war, otherwise he wouldn't have considered joining NATO at all considering Russia's (read Putin's) concerns. Does this justify the war? Definitely not. The repercussions are not only to innocent civilians but also on an economic global scale. A beautiful country like Syria was shied into ruins. Leadership is understanding the repercussions and understanding that the perpetrator might be relentless in his pursuit. Today, it looks like Ukraine is reinforced, but what if the war continues for 23.4.5 years... Will we still be celebrating how madman Zelensky is? Putin is justified over his concerns about NATO allies surrounding Russia. Does this justify the war? Not at all, but the reality is that he has chosen war and it's upon Zelensky to choose war or diplomacy.
