Peter Parfitt MEd. Your reply demonstrates, your lack of knowledge of history and Russia's current system of government. Perhaps even your unfamiliarity with the definition of the term "democracy". Just trying to help. In fact Russians embraced democracy before Australia or US. Sure things not always worked out as were intended, but to claim that a nation as advanced as Russians is clueless about democracy.... well... fill in the blanks.

"Freedom and democracy are still relatively new concepts in Russia for most." SW UR very much behind the times. Freedom and democracy are much older concepts in Russia than you are and even older than the USA itself. Russkies fought for freedom for centuries; both within Russia and fought against external enemies.

As far as democracy is concerned, the concept was always there. Alas, in 1917 democratic government of Russia was overthrown by Bolsheviks with intensive support of UK's democratic monarchy. Russia today with all her ills is a democracy. In Russian elections participate more political parties than in most Western states; perhaps no other Western state has such a broad variety of political parties. Duma has far more parties than just 2 as in the land of the Free and the Exceptional.

I'm not holding it against you for your lack of knowledge. I merely offer you some more contemporary insights. John McCain's (RIP) silly mantra about Russia is just a gas station ... is still popular in USA. In 2017 Forbes published: <https://www.forbes.com/sites/kenrapoza/2017/07/06/sorry-senator-mccain-russia-no-longer-just-a-gas-station-masquerading-as-a-country/?sh=23dcda1e22f0>

Hope this helps. 😊
